

Abstract

A method for calculating an architectural criteria comprising the following steps: placing in a computer program, a series of parameters which are related to an architectural criterion; inputting a series of data such that the data input is compared to pre-stored programmatic criteria and outlines whether the architectural design meets the criteria